The edge advantage is real, and innovations are driving it.

- 87% of edge adopters agree that their edge strategies are reporting outcomes that positively impact their businesses.
- 85% believe that deploying edge to address their most pressing needs is an attractive choice.
- 82% say their edge strategy is strongly aligned with their companies' transformation strategies.

- Enterprises are adopting edge strategies to solve urgent business problems.
- Two-thirds of early adopters are investing in edge as a service (EaaS) to unlock the full potential of the edge.
- Improved security, cost, and scalability are top factors driving adoption.

- Current edge adopters are seeing the fragmented approach to edge management.
- Organizations need to implement edge technologies in a comprehensive manner.

- The rise of edge adoption is driven by the combination of business need, cost, and technology.
- Enterprises need to establish clear leadership and accountability.

- To succeed with edge, enterprises must first define their edge requirements and how it fits into their overall strategy.
- End-to-end solutions with holistic management are required to fully realize the advantages of edge.

- Enterprises investing in edge and private networks are more likely to report improved business processes.
- 92% of edge adopters agree that edge investments are contributing to better business results.

- Top 5 insights:
  1. Improved access to data
  2. Streamlining business processes
  3. Enabling work from anywhere
  4. Protecting the IT infrastructure
  5. Boosting security

- Top 4 insights:
  1. Working with a single partner for edge expertise
  2. Integrating edge and connectivity
  3. Selecting software and hardware
  4. Identifying and managing security

- Achieving the edge advantage requires end-to-end solutions with holistic management.
- Key outcomes include improved security, cost, and scalability.
- Successful edge adoption requires a comprehensive approach to strategy, design, and implementation.

- Adoption of edge is transforming industries and offering new opportunities for growth and innovation.